FACILITATION/ INSTRUCTION

ACADEMIC LECTURER ROLES

Eugene Lang College, The New School (Spring 2023/ 24) Adjunct Professor. I Have A Dream Theater & Education Seminar: In this course, students delve into Transformative Theater Education -- while engaging in community practice by working with NYC public elementary school students at an 'I HAVE A DREAM' afterschool program. This course will challenge students to consider how learning is play and how theater games, improv and collaborative playwriting can allow young people to engage in critical literacy skills. Includes seminars, the groups explores the history of Theater in Education, learning how to design after school curricula and build teaching strategies. Includes experiences being onsite at an IHD afterschool program collaboratively running a small drama group with New School colleagues. Investigating the major prompt with your IHD students, "TO DREAM IS TO ---", the group explores this theme through a variety of theatre making techniques, building a culturally responsive approach to drafting curriculum and devising original work. At the end of the semester, students facilitate a performance, collaborating with colleagues in a sharing that will be written and performed by IHD youth for their families and community. This course fulfills an elective requirement for Lang Theater Majors and Minors.

Augsburg University- The Playwrights Center - Adjunct Professor of Playwriting 2022, spring semester. The writer develops a technique that is individual, yet grounded in fundamental dramatic writing skills. Writers will write weekly scenes and journal entries and be guided through exercises to develop facility with storytelling, plotting, stage action, dialogue, and thematic unity. Select plays by contemporary playwrights of color are read as inspiration and as a catalyst for their work. The class will analyze these plays to identify a variety of skills, themes, and concepts within four categories: Language as Identity, Intersection of Arts and Activism: The Playwright as Activist, Form, and Aesthetics, and Gender Narratives. The heart of this course is about providing a collaborative space where the writer is liberated to find, explore, and expand their theatrical voice to create a series of short works or a full-length play.

Marymount Manhattan College – MMC Adjunct Professor, Division of Fine and Performing Arts. Professor of Intermediate Playwriting (full academic year).
